

I am a part of club on campus called the Green Team, I have done this for going on 3 years now. Essentially, we stand at the trash bins in the dining halls and tell people how to throw away their trash. A lot of students have no idea that a lot of our campus dining products are compostable. But we try our best to educate them on why some items don't belong in the landfill and what makes something compostable. A lot of people are really surprised to find out that food is compostable as well.

Green team also does monthly audits where we sort through bags of trash and take data on how accurate people were when throwing it away. Being a part of the green team makes a difference because I engage with students weekly and educate them on how to handle waste in order to make GVSU more conscientious about zero waste. It is a part of our values as Lakers to be sustainable.
