I was someone who didn't think a lot of themselves. I entered this just to learn about the planet and teach others too. I never thought I would make it this far and become so engaged in it all. I have never felt so connected and happy doing something like this. This month has become the highlight of my year so far and I have learned so much. This past month has been such a roller coaster. There have been times where I have felt on top of the world like I was making a huge difference and really doing something. Other times I feel like I'm drained and that nothing I was doing was working. I dug down and pushed through. I didn't let what others told me stop me. I stuck to those who pushed me to continue on and supported me. I found friends I would have never met and started something no one else would have. Along the way, I found something that meant something to me.

I want to have my own home that is environmentally friendly where I can grow my own herbs and plants to create my own products that are organic and all natural. I will then start an international business that sells these products worldwide hopefully gathering attention. I would work to getting it Fair Trade certified. I would engage people of all ages and inform them about how they live and how they can also start helping the Earth more. My business will be a combination of a service and goods business and I would be able to make connections between other business like mine and then together we will make a greater impact.

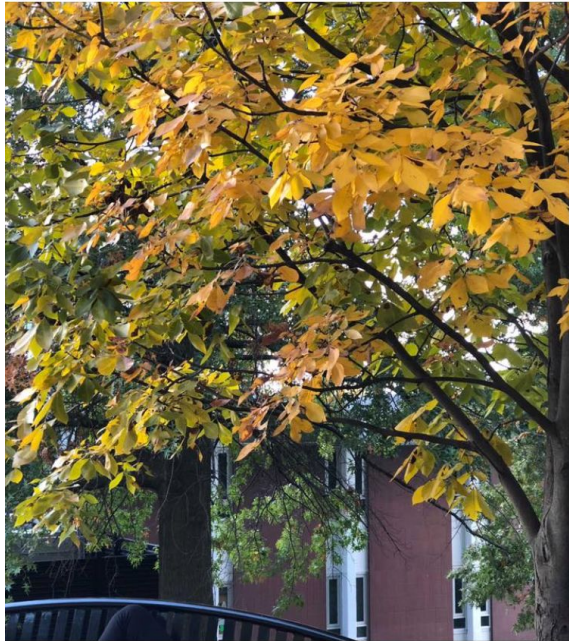

I chose this photo because it is after I got done cleaning up with a volunteer group. I enjoy that it captures that I am relaxing but also that I am taking a new perspective. I really got the chance to look at things differently and reflect on life.

My quote is Gandhi and I absolutely love it!! "You must be the change you want to see in the world."
