Ripple #1: Sanjana

JENNIFER'S FRIEND

Today, Sanjana decided to bike to our local mall instead of driving there like she usually does. In her science research class, Sanjana was learning about the carbon emissions from burning fossil fuels and its impacts. So, when Jennifer approached her about the ripple effect idea, Sanjana came up with her idea very easily and was happy to bike to the mall instead of driving in order to raise awareness.

Sanjana explained her biking to the mall to her family by talking to them about the pollution from a car, and also documented her biking journey and this important issue through Snapchat.

“I think that each of us have the power to shape the world, even if it is in a small way, or a seemingly inconceivable manner.”
-Sanjana Shanmugavel

Ripple #2: Isabella

JENNIFER'S FRIEND

This is Isabella, Jennifer's friend and fellow environmentalist, as they are both members of our school's environmental club. Isabella is passionate about conservation, but she still makes many unwise lifestyle choices every day - including her use of plastic water bottles.

"I would say that all my household consumes at least 10 plastic water bottles a day. I know that this is really bad for the environment, but it's sad to say that our convenience is more popular than conservation.

-Isabella Lok

Since her decision to use a glass mason jar instead of a plastic water bottle to drink water has compelled Isabella to speak with her mother on the issue. Isabella is in the process of eradicating plastic water bottles in the household and is strengthening her argument for conservation. Isabella has a goal to implement a water filtration system in her house and is doing chores to fund it!

Ripple #3: Erin

FOODIE

Erin Dong loves to cook, and loves her environment as well! She is also a member of our school's environmental club, and has been for 4 years.

We approached Erin, knowing that she would have the expertise of creating a vegan breakfast as would a masterchef. And she pulled it off perfectly, so much so that it was even instagram-worthy!

It's so important to be meatless, and Erin trail-blazed a vegan breakfast revolution by showcasing her beautiful avocado toast on her popular instagram.
