

Name: Naomi Judge

Username: njudge

Email address: njudge@unishanoi.org

School: United Nations International School of Hanoi

I feel like what I have been saying in regards to my dream throughout the PGC is getting a bit repetitive but I suppose this shows just how much I am passionate about the problem!

If I had the potential to change the planet, I would shut down all livestock farms across the world. One of the reasons why I have always wanted to do this is because I am aware of how cruel these industries operate in regards to how they treat animals which are raised there. Millions of chickens, pigs and cows amongst other farm animals are crammed into tiny dirty spaces with barely any room to move. They are also subjected to being hit, kicked and electrocuted by workers.

From what I have learnt during my PGC experience so far however, I want to make my plan happen as livestock farming has humongous consequences on the environment. Throughout various activities and research, I was able to learn that animal farming is accountable for a huge amount of greenhouse gas emissions which pollute our atmosphere. Additionally, the process requires the use of a lot of water, land, chemicals and crops.

Okay, so on to how I would actually achieve this goal....

My steps in the lead to banning all livestock farming/meat,dairy and egg production would firstly be to educate global citizens on the severe impacts which this industry is having on the environment. It is often easy for older people to dismiss these ideas as they will not be alive to witness the harm and personally be impacted by the consequences. For this reason, I think it would be especially important to teach younger students and perhaps educate them on the problem within schools (in mandatory classes such as Science and Humanities, for example).

The next step would be to get in contact with political leaders (like on Day 7's challenge) to help broadcast my findings/opinions to society. This would get more people educated and help move them to make informed changes in their lives.

The third step I would take is to start a campaign, and perhaps become a leader of that campaign or another organisation/political group. By doing so, I could steer my passion to the direction I want to and popularise my beliefs/knowledge. I would regularly be broadcasted on TV, talked about on radios, interviewed by news companies, mentioned in magazines, shown on social media and much more. Imagine all the awareness I would raise being publicised in ways like this? Fame isn't the aim for me; it's about educating others and getting my point across to a big audience.