- Do you think such a network would be beneficial to you and to your fellow student leaders? Would you have an interest in joining or taking a leadership role in such a network bringing together student leaders from all over the world working for positive change?

Of course, it would be beneficial! A group that connects individuals who want to make a change all over the world would be amazing. I would be honored to be a part of such a movement.

- If yes, what do you imagine that might look like and how might you be willing/able to contribute? Be as specific as you can.

This organization would connect people all over the world with a common goal. There will be smaller groups led and made up of project green participants and alum. They will also be open to non-participants. This organization would inform and impact through web pages, documentaries, and conventions. I see small volunteer groups alongside large projects and making a difference together. People of every race, religion, sex, and culture who want to make the Earth a better place to live will be together and I don't think anything will be able to stand in our way. We will affect companies big and small, money greedy and giving, international and community-based. The world will hear our voices and we will make an impact.

I would be able to contribute my organization skills, business skills, and communication skills. As I continue in my studies in International business these skills will only grow stronger and as I become more connected with people throughout the world I will make a greater impact. I am a great leader and can get big jobs done in short amounts of time. When I become dedicated to something, there is very little that can stop me from getting it done. Math and statistics are what I enjoy and by using them I can make sure that every step is thoroughly thought out and has a very low chance of failure.

I am also very good in the arts and acquainted with different cultures such as gamers and those who are considered "geeks". I am minoring in music technology so I can work with sound systems and help those who want to spread their message through music. This means I can help with big events making sure everything goes smoothly and everyone can hear our message. I am working with the college's local convention so I have a basic understanding how to set one up and run one.

Finally, I am certified to be a nursing assistant and in CPR. I can contribute my skills by helping those in need and if need be I love to travel so I am willing to go anywhere. I know people all over the world need help whether it be health wise or even in building shelters. I am confident in my skills enough that I am sure I would be able to make a difference. From big leadership roles to small set up and clean up roles I know everything makes a difference and I am willing to work my way from the bottom to the top.

- Let us know if you are all in and ready to roll up your sleeves and help write the slate for our journey forward.

I am willing to roll up my sleeves and help not only write the slate but carve it out for our journey forward. My studies are important also but I am willing to go online and balance everything. I am accustomed to busy schedules so it really wouldn't be much of a change. It has actually been really nice this past month being busy and always having something to do. I will work hard and do everything within my power to make an impact.
